Visegrad:
The Coming War in Eastern Europe
The Visegrad 4 alliance of Poland, the Czech Republic, Hungary and Slovakia, was originally formed in 1991 as a stopgap protective measure until those countries could obtain full NATO membership. Even though all four have since been granted that status, the V4 has quietly been maintained as a basis for further mutual economic and military cooperation.

Putin as Warlord
A warlord is a supreme leader who exercises military and civil control over a large geographic area due to the presence of armed forces loyal to him rather than any other authority. To be successful he has to be a man of vision, daring, strength and charisma.
by Gilberto Villahermosa

Sigma 64:
Ignored Vietnam Wargames
President Lyndon Johnson inherited foreign policy challenges from Kennedy's administration that were long on negatives and short of solutions. Southeast Asia was at the top of that list. One way he approached the challenge was through a wargame series codenamed "Sigma 64."

Matthew Bunker Ridgway:
The First Cold War General
In Korea, Gen. Matthew Ridgway not only exhibited a winning style of personal leadership, he also adapted to the demands made on generals in the Cold War era by showing he was able to plan and fight a "limited war." He agreed with President Truman that expanding the war by attacking into China would risk full-scale Soviet intervention. There was also suspicion Moscow had orchestrated the Korean War as a means to divert US attention to the Far East.

AirSea Battle: The Future of Aero-Naval Warfare
On 12 May 2013 the US Department of Defense officially announced the establishment of the "AirSea Battle concept." ASB is a major new component in America's equation for projecting power and sustaining operations during war and peace. It's essentially an operational doctrine. Here's our analysis.
