6 Red Dragon Falling: China's Coming Civil War

Over its 5,000 year history, China has undergone nearly continuous upheaval. Numerous dynasties have risen and fallen. They formed empires uniting the land that's now China, and then, after several hundred years (or less), they collapsed due to foreign invasion or civil war. Here's our analysis of where they are in that cycle.
by Terence Co

20 The 1973 Battle of Chinese Farm

On the afternoon of 9 October 1973, Israeli Col. Amnon Reshef led his 14th Armored Brigade on a reconnaissance on the shore of the Great Bitter Lake along the Suez Canal. That was the opening move of one of the largest tank actions of the Cold War—one in which the Israelis came close to defeat.
by Arnold Blumberg

28 Operation Dingo: Rhodesia 1977

The Rhodesian military proved its efficiency in many operations, including an airborne raid in November 1977 that had international effects. Taking part were two men who were there, not because it was their country, but because it was their choice.
by John W. Osborn, Jr.

40 The Far East in the Cold War

In the 1950s the US found itself fighting a limited war in Korea, supporting French forces in Indochina, and confronting communist China in the Taiwan Straits. For Washington the Far East became a major front in the larger Cold War.
